

J William (Six-Shooter Bill) Barn

This barn now belongs to Dr. and Shirley Green and is located behind their home at 375 East 200 North in Heber City. At present, it is leaning steadily to the east at about 10 to 15 degrees, much like the Tower of Piza. It formerly belonged to J. William (Six-Shooter Bill) Smith and his wife, Nellie. Very little is known of its origin, but it was built around the square of an old log building. This was used as a stall for younger stock. Then the rustic lumber was applied the exterior of the log part and extra space to the south was added on, to make a spacious two-story barn. Of course, hay was stored over the manger, and could easily be pushed down into the manger. It's roof is of tin, of which, many have been taken off by brisk winds. Dr. G. is in no condition, nor does he anticipate nailing them back on.

WOMAN'S HEALTH

Don't Ignore The Risk of PID

BY VICKI L. SELTZER, MD

College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists

Pelvic inflammatory disease (PID), which can result from unsafe sex and untreated sexually transmitted diseases, is the greatest single cause of infertility in the United States - a particular tragedy for its young victims. PID occurs when infections such as gonorrhea or chlamydia spread beyond a woman's lower genital tract and into the cervix, inflaming the uterus and fallopian tubes.

Each year one million U.S. women develop PID and one quarter of them are hospitalized. Without have had PID in the past, your risk of recurrence doubles.

Symptoms can be severe, mild or nonexistent. They may include vaginal discharge, painful urination, mild aching pain in the lower abdomen, abnormal bleeding, fever and chills, or nausea and vomiting.

If PID is suspected, your doctor will ask questions about your sexual history and perform a pelvic exam to see if your reproductive organs are swollen or tender. Blood tests, a cervical smear (a procedure like a Pap test), or another sampling procedure may be necessary to confirm the diagnosis.

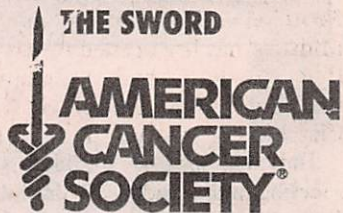

Antibiotics will be prescribed. Use them as instructed and finish all the medication. Your doctor will
